

Daffodil 'Rapture'

Narcissus 'Rapture' looks like a falcon diving after prey, going fast, with reflexed petals blown back. The early-bloomer stands 12 inches tall. Bred by Grant Mitsch in Oregon, this little daffodil has won many awards. All daffodils are deer and rodent proof. Deer and rodents leave daffodils alone because they contain a bitter toxic alkaloid called lycorine that mammals know not to eat. Available from Colorblends.com, a Connecticut-based flower bulb wholesaler that sells direct to landscape professionals and home gardeners coast-to-coast with a $60 minimum.
